

Looking Ahead

It would be rash to try to anticipate the shape and nature of health care in the United States 10 years from now. But major change is inevitable, and the system will be more cost conscious. In that future, people's behavior will become a more important lever to achieve better health outcomes and more efficient use of resources. Detection and optimal treatment of psychiatric conditions will ascend as priorities. Add to that the exciting and rapidly evolving advances in neuroscience, which already are informing psychiatric practice, and we have a future psychiatry that quickens the heartbeat.

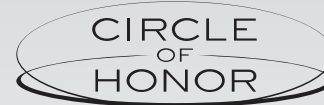

Psychiatric science advances and clinical options expand, but JCP's mission remains steadfast. We translate new knowledge and research findings into relevant material for practitioners. The process begins with scientists, scholars, and practitioners and flows through an ever-expanding pool of generous, talented colleagues, who perform the service of peer review anonymously and without compensation. The editors express our heartfelt gratitude to the following men and women, and especially to the members of our Circle of Honor. We look forward to working with you in the exciting future to come.
