

Many Thanks

As professor and head of an academic department of psychiatry, I live daily with a paradox. Our current, unstable, “nonsystem” of health care continues to lurch forward, buffeted by many forces and lacking a strategic plan. The casualties include academic missions, stability of clinical systems, and, most tragically, the well-being of people afflicted with illnesses (and their loved ones).

But on the brighter side, the horizon in academic psychiatry (and medicine, more broadly) has never been brighter. The rapidly expanding fields of genomics and proteomics, breakthroughs in neuroimaging technology, and many other advances promise new approaches to diagnosing and treating mental disorders.

Editing JCP enables me to continuously monitor the fruits of this progress. Investigators and clinicians report their exciting results and observations. The editorial process relies heavily on the expertise and generosity of colleagues throughout the world, who graciously and anonymously contribute their time to review manuscripts. My hat is off to the following ladies and gentlemen, who have earned my deep gratitude. —A.J.G.
