

Our Reviewers

Now the most widely read journal in psychiatry and one of the most cited in the field, JCP is blessed with a growing number of manuscript submissions. What had previously been stacks of paper manuscripts that strained my back as well as eyes, now has become a stream of electrons, as JCP's submission and review process went on-line at the beginning of 2003.

The manuscripts are a vibrant testimony to the vigor of psychiatry and its worldwide reach. Excellent papers from bright, creative colleagues come to us from the 4 corners of the globe. A majority are sent out to review, and given the growth in submissions, my requests for peer review have skyrocketed. (To help cope with the need for reviewers, we have begun to ask authors to recommend the names of at least 5 colleagues in the area without conflicts of interest.)

Thank goodness, scholars from around the world donate their time and expertise without compensation to review. I cannot overstate my gratitude to the following colleagues, whose efforts and generosity allow this process to move forward and bring you a journal that should help improve your knowledge and practice.
