

The New, Improved, Online-Only Primary Care Companion

For more than 10 years, The Primary Care Companion to The Journal of Clinical Psychiatry has provided you with the most up-to-date peer-reviewed evidence about the treatment of psychiatric disorders in primary care. Starting with the next issue, the Companion will become an online-only publication, making all the existing benefits and even more available sooner and at your convenience with the click of a mouse.

No longer will you have to wait for delivery to your mailbox every other month. Instead, register at PSYCHIATRIST.COM to continue your uninterrupted free subscription to the Companion and to receive e-mail notifications about each new article as soon as it is ready for publication.

The new online-only Companion will be dynamic. Many articles will include animated figures, audio commentary, or video vignettes. Readers will chat with authors in the Companion forums, and hyperlinked references and text will make other articles on similar topics and relevant resources instantly available. Sharing articles with others will be easy with the new format.

The Companion's online-only delivery will not compromise the quality you have become used to. All articles will continue to be peer-reviewed to bring you the highest quality original research and review articles under the guidance of Larry Culpepper, MD, MPH, Editor in Chief. Each issue will also continue to offer valuable CME-certified activities.

Authors will also benefit from the online-only delivery. Turnaround time from submission to publication will decrease, and articles will be posted as soon as they are approved by the authors instead of waiting in line for publication. Authors will be able to offer supplementary materials of interest to readers that will be linked online to the parent articles. Most importantly, all Companion articles will continue to be abstracted and indexed in the National Library of Medicine through PubMed Central.

The online-only Companion will always be at your fingertips from anywhere in the world. Improved searching features will make retrieval of articles easy for you. To save you time, e-mailed articles will include abstracts and, where appropriate, clinical points that will help you use the information in your own practice. You also will have the added advantage of receiving information before unregistered users who must wait for articles to be posted at PubMed Central.

Register for the Companion today at PSYCHIATRIST.COM so you won't miss an issue. Giving us your e-mail address will ensure a continual stream of useful information that you can use to diagnose and treat your patients who suffer from psychiatric disorders.

With the online-only Companion, there's nothing to lose—but you must register in order to receive this expanded delivery service.

We thank you for your support and loyalty and look forward to working together to achieve ever greater benefits from the new Companion.

John S. Shelton, PhD
Publisher
doi:10.4088/PCC.09pn00864