

Magnanimity

Magnanimity: a generous spirit.

Busy academicians, clinicians, scientists, teachers, and scholars are, well, busy. When editors turn to these colleagues to read and peer review a manuscript, we offer no incentives. There is no compensation, and their time and effort are donated anonymously. Fortunately, most show the generous spirit that defines magnanimity. Why? These men and women see a purpose beyond themselves, feel a connection to a greater good. As is the case with other journals, love of science motivates altruism in reviewers. But ours is also a journal that impacts patient care, and our reviewers are touched by that need. These are friends who remember our mission to offer comfort, improve lives, and heal the sick—someday to prevent brain diseases.

Each year at this time, the editors thank the magnanimous men and women who are JCP's reviewers. Truly, we couldn't do what we do without your beneficence. You are essential to the vitality and function of academic medicine.

Our deepest gratitude goes to the peers who are in JCP's Circle of Honor, who have gone above and beyond in the number, promptness, and constructive caliber of their reviews. To our Circle members, all of our reviewers, our readers, and JCP's marvelous staff, we wish health and success in 2013.
